Incontinence Associated Dermatitis is a skin problem common to patients in the home care setting. Prolonged contact between the skin and urine and/or feces will produce inflammation and contributes to the development of various serious skin disorders, including pressure ulcers. These issues are critically important to the patient's quality of life as well as to the health care financial burden. Program faculty will provide the viewer with an in-depth look at the structure of the skin and its functions. Common skin problems associated with incontinence will be identified and differentiated. Prevention and treatment strategies will be explored in order to improve patient outcomes.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES:

1. Discuss the function of skin.
2. Identify the three layers of skin.
3. Identify common skin problems related to incontinence.
4. Discuss prevention and treatment strategies for skin breakdown due to incontinence.
